PRESBYTERIANISM

In Vicinity of Victoria—A Sabbath Among Them.

An Excellent Description of Our Environment.

It was at half past eight o'clock on the morning of Sabbath, 26th June, that Rev D. McRae, the missionary in charge of Esquimalt, Craigflower, Cedar Hill, Sooke and Saanich, and myself drove out of the city of Victoria, to overtake a day's allotment of the group of mission stations just enumerated. The three first are clustered within about four miles of Victoria, the others are far out over the hills, and widely separated from one another. Even with the generous aid of Rev. D. Fraser, of Pandora street church, Victoria, who gives two or three afternoon services in the month to the stations near the city, all the places cannot be reached every Sabbath. Sooke and, I think Saanich, have to remain content with monthly service.

The road leads by a lonely, wooded drive around the head of

ESQUIMALT HARBOR.

We have driven eleven miles to make five. But that is a way of this country of hills and mountains. One cannot grudge the extra miles, even this raw morning. The drive is exquisite. No better road on the continent. And such a border; an occasional huge Douglas fir in the near back-ground, in the midst of a continuous growth of tall, shapely balsams. The sombre green of these is relieved by here and there an arbutus with its glossy leaves and perfectly smooth bright-red bark, while ferns of six or eight feet in height, and wild roses of equally vigorous growth, and the yellow broom, with now and then a fringe of the delicate dewberry, form a close hedge on either side. Three or four miles further through heavier bush, with occasionally a small ranch, and is reached. The place consists of a neat little Anglican church, where service is conducted and a tiny school-house, which might be made to hold perhaps forty scholars. As a matter of fact, there are only about a dozen and a-half to attend, and the teacher divides each week with another still smaller school eight miles distant. The interior is scrupulously clean, and besides the maps, there are some pretty pictures on the walls. The teacher's desk stands in the centre of the room, behind it a large open fire place, with mantle; in front of it, on either side plain, old-fashioned long desks. That cosy rocking-chair is said to be for a feeble old lady who attends service. It is to be hoped the teacher uses it, too. A teacher in a rocking-chair, before a blazing fire, with his dozen pupils around him, is quite the beau-ideal of a school; more likelihood of real educative work being done than in any elaborately organized and graded institution "run" on the machine system. School teachers hold a good position in British Columbia. The standard of qualification is high. They receive their salary directly from the government, and on a quite liberal scale. The teacher of Metchosen school has $60 per month.

The people gather slowly, less than a dozen, representatives of four families. There are not more than a few sheep in the wilderness. We dine at a romantic little ranch out out of the forest. The wee house is perched on a slope, backed and overtopped by a rocky ridge, thickly clad with pines. A dinner for a prince—a delicious venison steak—the law imposes no close season on the rancher on his own property—and strawberries just from the vines in the trim little garden. A new family are guests along with us, arrived lately from Stanstead, Quebec, to carve a home for themselves among these giant trees. They will add strength to our struggling cause. The afternoon's work is a drive of twenty-one miles to and another service. The road lies mostly through a winding valley. For nine or ten miles it is a constant uphill and downhill. As we advance the Douglas firs increase in size; trees of six, eight, even ten feet in diameter, may be seen. Many are charred with the forest fires, but the thick bark acts as a shield. The vigour of the trees is unimpaired. The curious practice of scaffolding the tree and cutting it off at the height of about fifteen feet from the ground, prevails to some extent. The stumps are like mighty pillars. Even when the forest is closest, with hugecedar among the firs, and a varied underbrush, the bracken flourishes and forms a fringe to the road-way; in the shadier spots the "cow" fern flourishes in graceful clumps, while much of the steep rock-face is garnished with the white, and yellow, and crimson of clinging lichen. Only two or three clearings appear, until, after infinite windings, Sooke harbor comes in sight. There are evidently other ranches near, although not close to the highway, for here and there a rough box is found, nailed to a tree trunk, or attached to a stake set for the purpose. These boxes are for the mail matter of the settlers, who enjoy the luxury of a "delivery" of papers and letters in Albert hut once a week.

Sooke harbor is at the furthest west point of the southern part of Vancouver Island which has been settled and the settlement is on the Island, the three brothers, Muir, who hold the greatest proportion of the land—very valuable it is for agriculture as well as for timber—having come here with their father about 1851, and remained ever since. They have been manufacturers of timber and lumber, as well as being farmers. A rich iron ore is found in abundance within sight of the saw mill, and coal crops out at no great distance. A valuable addition, a number of energetic settlers, principally from Scotland, has lately been received. Sooke, though a remote point, is an important one. No church but our own holds service here, and we were late in the field. To Bishop Cridge, at present of the Reformed Episcopal Church, is due much credit for the interest he took in this settlement for long years when, but for him, the people might have truly said, "No man careth for our souls."

A hearty meeting of between thirty-five and forty in the school-house, and a couple of calls on neighboring families, and the Sabbath closes. There is promise of a strong and active station at Sooke. The material is there, and substantial progress has already been made since Mr. McRae's advent, less than two years ago. These outposts of the church have a strong claim on our sympathy, and the hard-working missionaries who are serving in them under many difficulties. Purple finger-nails imply imperfect circulation, and this, in turn, is both a result and a cause of impaired health. The great heart of the church should beat so strong that the warm blood of its affection and friendly help shall reach its remotest extremity. Life and progress at these points means increased power to the church as a whole for the great work which lies still further beyond.—Rev. R. D. Fraser, Bowmanville, Ont., in Presbyterian Review.

MURDER OF ARCHBISHOP SEGHERS.

Particulars of the Crime and Where it Occurred.

SAN FRANCISCO, July 19.—Archbishop Seghers and Fathers Tossi and Robault, with Frank Fuller, guide and workman, remained at the mouth of Stewart river until September 7th. The two Fathers were left there to establish a mission, and the Archbishop decided to go down the Yukon to Nuklukayet, a village near the mouth of the Tanana river. He left Stewart river September 8th with Frank Fuller, and several Indians were met and went with them. Nuklukayet was reached on October 24th, and the party lodged at the trading post. The journey was made partly in dog sleds and partly in boats. Remaining here a few weeks, the Archbishop decided to push on to Nulato, several hundred miles lower down, near lat. 65° north, and not far from Norton Sound in Behring Sea. After leaving Nuklukayet Father Tossi knows only what was told him by the Indian guides and a half-breed Indian who witnessed the murder. After several days journey on sleds from Nuklukayet a stop was made at a point about thirty miles from Noulata, which latter is distant from St. Michael's about 175 miles. The Archbishop desired to push onward to a more suitable place for a mission, and consulted with his Indian guides upon the subject. This action did not suit Fuller, who told the Archbishop that he ought to ask his advice and not that of the Indians. He replied that the Indians were to be depended upon and had experience as guides, and that he wished to go on. This resolution caused Fuller to grumble, and he began to endeavor to make the natives discontented with the Archbishop.

A DEPUTE,

After the camp was made and the party were gathered around the fire in their half tent and half dog-out, Fuller and the Archbishop had some words together, but as they talked in English and the Indians understood for the most part only their native tongue and the Russian language, it is not known what the conversation was about. Fuller, however, appeared to be suspicious and sullen, while the Archbishop was inclined to be in light spirits, laughing several times during the evening.

After supper the party arranged their bedding around the fire for the night. The weather was exceedingly bitter at this time, the thermometer ranging from ten to twenty degrees below zero. The Indian boy states that several times during the night Fuller got up and walked around the fire, and seemed to be nervous. In spreading their furs and blankets, Fuller's bed was next to that of the Archbishop, while that of the Indians was on the opposite side. The Archbishop would therefore be sleeping between Fuller and the Indians. The dogs that were used for drawing the sleighs were bunched at the head of all the beds.

THE MURDER.

Early next morning, this being Sunday, November 28, about the break of day, the boy states that he saw Fuller get up from the place where he was sleeping and sit by the embers of the fire in the center of the hut. He was seated, looking at the sleeping Archbishop and had a rifle under his cloak. Suddenly he arose and called to his victim, saying it was time to get up.

Raising his head the sight of the rifle barrel met the archbishop's gaze. The Indian says that both he and the Archbishop appeared to be too dazed to speak. The latter, as if mechanically, folded his hands across his breast and bowed his head. The bullet entered his forehead, over the left eye, passing through the head and coming out at the back of he head, near the top of the neck. The Archbishop died almost immediately.

TAKEN TO ST. MICHAEL'S.

The Bishop's body was placed on a sleigh and taken to Noulata. It was here encased as well as possible, and forwarded by trail to St. Michael's, carriage being made on sleighs drawn by dogs. St. Michael's was reached a few days before Christmas.

Frederickson, the trader at Noulata, is said to be the only white man besides Fuller who saw the Bishop's face after death. Fuller accompanied the remains to St. Michael's. The body is now there, and is kept in a frozen state by ice, which is kept continually around it. Before leaving the camp near Noulata it was frozen stiff by weather, and has been kept so ever since.

With reference to whether or not the body will be brought from St. Michael's or be buried there, Father Tossi says that he has left the matter in the hands of the captains of the revenue cutters Rush and Bear, and the agent of the Alaska Commercial Company. The body is now in the old Russian Tower at San Michael's. The Bear was to have left that point on the 4th instant for a southern cruise, under former instructions from the government. If it is decided to bring the body down, the Bear will touch at St. Michael's on its return trip. Father Tossi, however, is of the opinion that a decision will be made to temporarily inter the remains there, with the intention to later send up a strong metallic coffin, in which they will be brought to Victoria for final interment. If the body is brought down now it will probably come on the revenue cutter Bear, which is expected to steam south the latter part of August or the first of September.

THE MURDERER.

It is thought that on the return trip of this cutter Fuller will be brought to Sitka for trial. He is now at St. Michael's. The latter lives an isolated life. He has a but or tent to himself, and is served with meals by the Alaska Company, meals being taken to the hut. The inhabitants of the place feel so bitter toward Fuller that they shun him in every possible way. In a way he is said to deplore the death of the Archbishop, saying the prelate was a much better man than himself, and if any one died he ought to have been the man. Fuller shows, however, no indication of taking his own life, confessed by remorse. On the contrary, he lives in constant fear that some one else will take his life. He starts at every sudden sound, while an unlooked-for rifle shot frightens him into a terror.

WHY HE DRANK?

No one seems to know the cause for the shooting. Father Tossi thinks that Fuller may have become partially crazed on account of his naturally morbid suspiciousness. The people at St. Michael's, however, say Fuller's mind is sound as a dollar. A suspicious disposition was manifested on the steamer trip from Portland to Fort Wrangel and Chilcat. So marked had this trait grown that when Chilcat was reached Father Tossi advised Archbishop Seghers to send Fuller back to Portland on the returning steamer. The Archbishop, however, thought that when the party had advanced beyond the limit of civilization Fuller's fear that somebody was plotting to take his life would leave him.

In one forty acre tract not a tree was left standing. The roads in all directions were completely blocked by timber.

TRAIN ROBBERS.

ST. LOUIS, July 22.—The train men of the Vandalia train, due here last night, but which did not arrive till between 12 and 1 a. m., report that at Long Point, this side of Indianapolis, the conductor discovered four rough-looking men in the rear of the platform of the baggage car. He ordered them off, but as the train started they got on the rear of the tender, where they were all again found when the train reached Greenup Crossing. They were forcibly ejected and moved away, but as the train was passing a clump of bushes near the crossing they opened fire from revolvers, and sent some 20 bullets whistling through the baggage the express and passenger cars. Luckily nobody was shot, but there were several narrow escapes. The train was brought to a halt and a posse of citizens organized at once and immediate search was begun. It is thought the object was to rob the train.

THE CRUISER ATLANTA.

WASHINGTON, July 22.—In his report to Secretary Whitney of the trial of the guns of the cruiser Atlanta, Capt. Bunce says: Not only were the gun carriages disabled as heretofore reported, but also the arrangement of the battery was bad, as some of the guns had to be abandoned by the crews so that other guns might be fired at the target. Commenting on the results of the battery trials, Secretary Whitney said the reports are not very favorable as to the first trials of the guns, but as yet the matter of great moment that has turned up is this: If two rounds of her battery give this result, what would a dozen do, and this is what we are called on to ascertain. She is meant as a fighting ship and must be further tested. She should have cruised at sea sufficiently long to subject her to a trial in all weather. Her battery should be tested by actual firing till her working characteristics are determined and defects discovered. For these purposes a board should be appointed and the matter settled at the earliest day.

A GREAT STRIKE.

PITTSBURG, July 22.—The coke strike just ended was one of the most stubbornly contested battles ever fought between capital and labor. For eleven weeks and four days the fight went on, and the amount of money lost by idleness cannot be calculated; but it reaches millions. When the strike began four-fifths of the 11,000 men in the region had money of their own, but few of them have now money enough to take them out of the district if they wanted to go. The pumps have been kept running at all pits and yardmasters, superintendents and clerks have been drawing salaries and the mules getting fat on oats and hay that they did not earn. At West Leisenring, where Pinkerton men have been stationed, the expense has been over $1000 a day since the strike began. Besides this, the ovens have become badly out of repair and fully a third of them all over the region will have to be overhauled before the coal can be put into them. Then the coke trade has fallen off and will take time and money to build it up. It is estimated the actual expenses to operators have been from $700,000 to $1,000,000, while the entire loss will foot over a million dollars.

WHAT SPRECKLES SAYS.

SAN FRANCISCO, July 20.—In an interview J. D. Spreckles said:

The Canadian Pacific Company have offered for £100,000 to lay down the Sydney and Auckland mails in London in 35 days and 30 hours.

For a like sum the Pacific & Oriental Company via the Suez Canal, will place the Australian mails in London in thirty-six days.

The Oceanic Company is now delivering the Colonial mails in thirty-seven days.

If arrangements can be made with the Australian postal authorities, we can, by carrying the mail from Sidney to San Diego in nineteen days, in connection with the Atchison & Topeka, reach New York four days later, and place the mails in London in seven days more by the transatlantic steamers, making a total of thirty days, which time can be reduced to twenty-seven days by not stopping at Honolulu.

NO SOOKE.

SAN FRANCISCO, July 20.—Louis McQuade, of Victoria, a member of the pioneer ship chandlery firm of that city, is visiting San Francisco in company with his family. Mr. McQuade states that Victoria has not experienced any boom from the completion of the Canadian Pacific Railroad.

In Brief and to the Point.

Dyspepsia is dreadful. Disordered liver is misery. Indigestion is a foe to good nature.

The human digestive apparatus is one of the most complicated and wonderful things in existence. It is easily put out of order.

Greasy food, tough food, sloppy food, bad cookery, mental worry, late hours, irregular habits, and many other things which ought not to be have made the American people a nation of dyspeptics.

But Green's August Flower has done a wonderful work in removing this and kindred and sickly the American people as healthy that they can enjoy their meals and be happy.

Remember! No dyspeptic without health. But Green's August Flower brings health and happiness to the dyspeptic. Ask your druggist for a bottle (twenty-five cents).

THE TWO GREAT ENGLISH SPEAKING NATIONS.

Great Britain is not the only country that has during this "Jubilee year of ours" been reveling in statistical information as to the progress she has made within the last fifty years. Brother JONATHAN is now directing his attention to statistics and practically says to Britain "if you'll blow your trumpet assuredly I will likewise blow mine." Never before in the history of either country has the press teemed with such important and interesting information relative to the astounding progress each nation has made since Queen VICTORIA ascended the throne of the British Empire.

The Americans claim, and justly so, that the development, advancement and prosperity of their country is a theme which to do it justice would occupy many volumes, and many are being written annually regarding it without exhausting the subject. Within the period named the population is estimated to have increased 260 per cent. The National commerce has during that time increased from $14 to $21 per capita. Mr. MULHALL, a British statistician, wrote some years ago that the United States was adding to its wealth yearly about as much as Great Britain, France and Germany combined. Great faith is put upon his figures, and he placed their respective yearly accumulations thus: Great Britain, $325,000,000; France, $375,000,000; Germany, $200,000,000; and the United States $875,000,000. According to the census returns of this country the National wealth increased from $30,068,000,000 in 1870, to $43,642,000,000 in 1880, or at the rate of $1,357,000,000 yearly. And this notwithstanding the luxurious—and too frequently very extravagant—style in which the people generally live. Then the National revenue of the United States has increased from $51,000,000 in 1836, to $337,000,000 in 1886—or from $3 to $5.52 for each inhabitant. But, in connection with this, it is worthy of special remark that fifty years ago the taxation on luxuries was practically nothing, and now it amounts to over $2 per capita. But, however favorable to the United States the above figures may be the relative statistics of Great Britain are no less gratifying. During the last fifty years the population of the United Kingdom has increased from twenty-six to thirty-seven millions, notwithstanding that over nine millions have emigrated during that time, and that the population of the British colonies have increased in population seventy-two per cent. Within that period, too, British trade has increased from $30 to $85 per capita. As for the National wealth the Income Tax returns show an increase of 130 per cent. in fifty two years, while the Legacy and Succession Duties show an increase from forty-one million pounds sterling in 1835, to one hundred and eighty-one million pounds sterling in 1885. But neither of these takes cognisance of the savings of the working classes, and the returns of the Savings Banks and Societies show that these increased from thirty million pounds sterling in 1840 to one hundred and sixty million pounds sterling in 1886. In 1837 the value of railways in the United Kingdom was £21,000,000; now the value is over £831,000,000. As for textile manufactures, these have increased from 854,000,000 lb. in 1840, to 2,627,000,000 lb. last year. Then while the British revenue from these unnecessary luxuries, liquors and tobacco, has during the last fifty years increased from £97,500,000 to £130,000,000, the other taxes have decreased from £97,500,000 to £47,500,000. But among the most pleasing of British statistics are those which show the great diminution in both the death and criminal rate. Since 1870 the death-rate has decreased no less than 10 per cent., or a saving of over 70,000 lives annually; while crime during that time has decreased from 204 per 100,000 inhabitants to 59. Besides, the pauper rate has diminished from 48 per 1,000 inhabitants to 27. Then since 1875—only twelve years—the number of children attending school in Britain have increased 70 per cent. In 1840 the British spent 2s. per head on books and newspapers yearly, while now they spend 8s. per head in that way. "But, as was already observed, it would occupy volumes to dwell upon the many points showing the marvellous progress and prosperity of either of the two nations, and so we have here simply briefly alluded to a few of the more prominent characteristics.

Walter M. Gibson, the deposed Prime Minister of Hawaii, was born in South Carolina, got in trouble with the Venezuelan Government, shipped ice to Brazil, was leader of a rebellion in Sumatra and was sentenced to be hanged, palmed himself off as the heir of a British nobleman, appeared in Utah as a colleague of Brigham Young, and went to Honolulu to establish a Mormon colony, where he went into politics and became Prime Minister. Truth is stranger than fiction.

CHAPTER XIV.

WHAT CULTURE DID FOR IT

A SENATOR.

THERE was at this time in the senate of the United States an eminent and respected gentleman, scholarly, orderly, honorable, and radical—the fit representative of a scholarly, orderly, honorable and radical commonwealth. For many years he had held his trust with conscious rectitude, and a slight depreciation of other forms of merit; and for as many years had been regularly returned to his seat by his constituency with equally conscious rectitude in themselves and an equal skepticism regarding others. Removed by his nature beyond the reach of certain temptations, and by circumstances beyond even the knowledge of others, his social and political integrity was spotless. An orator and practical debater, his refined tastes kept him from personality, and the public recognition of the complete unselfishness of his motives and the magnitude of his dogmas protected him from scurrility. His principles had never been appealed to by a bribe; he had rarely been approached by an emotion.

A man of polished taste in art and literature, and possessing the means to gratify it, his luxurious home was filled with treasures he had himself collected and further enhanced by the stamp of his appreciation. His library had not only the elegance of adornment that his wealth could bring and his taste approve, but a certain refined negligence of habitual use and the easy disorder of the artist's workshop. All this was quickly noted by a young girl who stood on its threshold at the close of a dull January day.

The card that had been brought to the senator bore the name of "Carmen de Haro," and modestly in the right hand corner, in almost microscopic script, the further description of herself as "Artist." Perhaps the picturesqueness of the name and its historic suggestion caught the scholar's taste, for when to his request, through his servant, that she would be kind enough to state her business, she replied as frankly that her business was personal to himself, he directed that she should be admitted. Then intrenching himself behind his library table, overlooking a bastion of books and a glacis of pamphlets and papers, and throwing into his forehead and eyes an expression of utter disqualification for anything but the business before him, he calmly awaited the intruder.

She came, and for an instant stood, hesitatingly, framing herself as a picture in the door. Mrs. Hopkinson was right—she had "no style," unless an original and half foreign quaintness could be called so. There was a desperate attempt visible to combine an American shawl with the habits of a mantilla, and it was always slipping from one shoulder, that was so supple and vivacious as to betray the deficiencies of an education in stays. There was a cluster of black curls around her low forehead, fitting her so closely as to seem to be part of the sealskin cap she wore. Once, from the force of habit, she attempted to put her shawl over her head and talk through the folds gathered under her chin, but an astonished look from the senator checked her. Nevertheless he felt relieved, and, rising, motioned her to a chair with a heartiness he would have scarcely shown to a Parisian toilleta. And when, with two or three quick, long steps she reached his side and showed a frank, innocent but strong and determined little face, feminine only in its flash of eye and beauty of lip and chin curves, he put down the pamphlet he had taken up somewhat ostentatiously and gently begged to know her business.

I think I have once before spoken of her voice—an organ more often cultivated by my fair countrywomen for singing than for speaking, which, considering that much of our practical relations with the sex are carried on without the aid of an opera score, seems a mistaken notion of theirs—and of its sweetness, gentle inflexion, and musical emphasis. She had the advantage of having been trained in a musical language, and came of a race with whom catarrhs and sore throats were rare. So that in a few brief phrases she sang the senator into acquiescence as she imparted the plain libretto of her business—namely, a "desire to see some of his rare engravings."

Now the engravings in question were certain etchings of the early Great Apprentices of the art, and were, I am happy to believe, extremely rare. From my unprofessional view they were exceedingly bad—showing the mere genesis of something since perfected, but dear, of course, to the true collector's soul; I don't believe that Carmen really admired them either. But the minx knew that the senator prided himself on having the only 'pot hooks' of the great 'A,' or the first artistic efforts of 'B'—I leave the real names to be filled in by the connoisseur,—and the senator became interested. For the last year, two or three of those abominations had been hanging in his study, utterly ignored by the casual visitor. But here was appreciation! "She was," she added, "only a poor young artist, unable to purchase such treasures, but equally unable to resist, the opportunity afforded her, even at the risk of seeming bold, or of obtruding upon a great man's privacy," etc., etc.

This flattery, which, if offered in the usual legal tender of the country, would have been looked upon as counterfeit, delivered here in a foreign accent, with a slightly tropical warmth, was accepted by the senator as genuine. These children of the sun are so impulsive! We, of course, feel a little pity for the person who thus transcends our standard of good taste and violates our conventional canon—but they are always sincere. The cold New Englander saw nothing wrong in one or two direct and extravagant compliments, that would have insured his visitor's early dismissal if tendered in the clipped metallic phrases of the commonwealth he represented.

So that in a few moments the black, curly head of the little artist and the white, flowing locks of the senator were close together bending over the book that contained the engravings. It was then that Carmen, listening to a graphic description of the early rise of art in the Netherlands, forgot herself and put her shawl around her head, holding its folds in her little brown hand. In this situation they were, at different times during the next two hours, interrupted by five congressmen, three senators, a cabinet officer and a judge of the supreme bench—each of whom was quickly but courteously dismissed. Popular sentiment, however, broke out in the hall.

"Well, I'm blanked, but this gets me." (The speaker was a territorial delegate.)

"At this time of life, too, lookin' over pictures with a gal young enough to be his granddhild." (This from a venerable official, also suspected of various erotic irregularities.)

"She don't handsome say." (The honorable member from Dakota.)

"This accounts for his protracted silence during the session." (A serious colleague from the senator's own state.)

"Oh, blank it all!" (Omnes.)

Four went home to tell their wives. There are few things more touching in the matrimonial compact than the superior frankness with which each confides to each the various irregularities of their friends. It is upon these secret confidences that the firm foundations of marriage rest unshaken.

Of course the objects of this comment, at least one of them, were quite oblivious. "I trust," said Carmen, timidly, when they had for the fourth time regarded in rapt admiration an abominable something by some Dutch woodchopper, "I trust I am not keeping you from your great friends"—her pretty eyelids were cast down in tremulous distress—"I should never forgive myself. Perhaps it is important business of the state?"

"Oh, dear, no! They will come again—it's their business."

The senator meant it kindly. It was so near the perilous edge of a compliment of your average cultivated Boston man ever ventures, and Carmen picked it up, femininely, by its sentimental end. "And I suppose I shall not trouble you again?"

"I shall always be proud to place the portfolio at your disposal. Command me at any time," said the senator, with dignity.

"You are kind. You are good," said Carmen, "and I—I am but—look you—only a poor girl from California, that you know not."

"Pardon me—I know your country well." And indeed he could have told her the exact number of bushels of wheat to the acre in her own county of Monterey, its voting population, its political bias. Yet of the more important product before him, after the manner of book-read men, he knew nothing.

Carmen was astonished, but respectful. It transpired presently that she was not aware of the rapid growth of the silkworm in her own district, knew nothing of the Chinese question, and very little of the American mining laws. Upon these questions the senator enlightened her fully. "Your name is historic, by the way," he said pleasantly. "There was a Knight of Alcantara, a 'de Haro,' one of the emigrants with La Casa."

Carmen nodded her head quickly. "Yes; my great-great-g-r-e-a-t grandfather!"

The senator stared.

"Oh, yes. I am the niece of Victor Castro, who married my father's sister."

"The Victor Castro of the 'Blue Mass' mine?" asked the senator abruptly.

"Yes," she said quietly.

Had the senator been of the Gashwiler type he would have expressed himself, after the average masculine fashion, by a long-drawn whistle. But his only perceptible appreciation of a sudden astonishment and suspicion in his mind was a lowering of the social thermometer of the room so decided that poor Carmen looked up innocently, chilled and drew her shawl closer around her shoulders.

"I have something more to ask," said Carmen, hanging her head—"it is a great, oh, a very great favor."

The senator had retreated behind his bastion of books again, and was visibly preparing for an assault. He saw it all now. He had been, in some vague way, deluded. He had given confidential audience to the niece of one of the Great Claimants before congress. The inevitable ax had come to the grindstone. What might not this woman dare ask of him? He was the more implacable that he felt he had already been prepossessed—and honestly prepossessed—in her favor. He was angry with her for having pleased him. Under the icy polish of his manner there were certain Puritan callosities caused by early straight lacing. He was not yet quite free from his ancestor's cheerful ethics that Nature, as represented by an impulse, was as much to be restrained as Order represented by a Quaker.

Without apparently noticing his manner, Carmen went on, with a certain potential freedom of style, gesture and manner scarcely to be indicated in her mere words. "You know, then, I am of Spanish blood, and that, what was my adopted country, our motto was 'God and Liberty.' It was of you, sir—the great Emancipator—the apostle of that Liberty—the friend of the down-trodden and oppressed—that I, as a child, first knew. In the histories of this great country I have read of you; I have learned your orations. I have longed to hear you in your own pulpit deliver the creed of my ancestors. To hear you, of yourself, speak, ah! Madre de Dios! what shall I say—speak the oration eloquent—to make the—what you call—the debate, that is what I have for so long hoped. Eh! Pardon—you are thinking me foolish—wild, eh!—a small child—eh?"

"To hear you, of yourself, speak."

Becoming more and more dialectical as she went on, she said suddenly, "I have you of myself offended. You are mad of me as a bold, bad child! It is so!"

The senator, as visibly becoming limp and weak again behind his entrenchments, managed to say, "Oh, no!" then "really!" and finally, "Th-e-atre!"

"I am here but for a day. I return to California in a day, as it were to-morrow. I shall never, never hear you speak in your place in the Capitol of this great country!"

The senator said hastily that he feared—he in fact was convinced—that his duty during this session was required more at his desk, in the committee work, than in speaking, etc., etc.

"Ah," said Carmen sadly, "it is true, then, all this that I have heard. It is true that what they have told me—that you have given up the great party—that your voice is not longer heard in the old—what you call this—eh—the old issues?"

"If any one has told you that, Miss De Haro," responded the senator sharply, "he has spoken foolishly. You have been misinformed. May I ask who——"

"Ah!" said Carmen, "I know not! It is in the air! I am a stranger. Perhaps I am deceived. But it is of all. I say to them, When shall I hear him speak? I go day after day to the Capitol, I watch him—the great emancipator—but it is of business, eh!—it is the claim of that one, it is the tax, eh! it is the impost, it is the postoffice, but it is the great speech of human rights—never, never. I say, 'How arrives all this?' And some say, and shake their heads, 'Never again he speaks.' He is what you call 'played—yes, it is so, eh!—played out.' I know it not—it is a word from Boston, perhaps! They say he has—eh, I speak not the English well—the party he has shaken, 'shook'—yes—he has the party 'shaken,' eh! It is right—it is the language of Boston, eh?"

"Permit me to say, Miss De Haro," returned the senator, rising with some asperity, "that you seem to have been unfortunate in your selection of acquaintances, and still more so in your ideas of the derivations of the English tongue. The—er—the—er—expressions you have quoted are not common to Boston, but emanate, I believe, from the west."

Carmen De Haro contritely buried everything but her black eyes in her shawl.

"No one," he continued, more gently, sitting down again, "has the right to forecast from my past what I intend to do in the future, or designate the means I may choose to serve the principles I hold or the party I represent. These are my functions. At the same time should occasion or opportunity—for we are within a day or two of the close of the session——"

"Yes," interrupted Carmen sadly, "I see—it will be some business, some claim, something for somebody—ah! Madre de Dios—you will not speak, and I——"

"When do you think of returning?" asked the senator, with grave politeness; "when are we to lose you?"

"I shall stay to the last—to the end of the session," said Carmen. "And now I shall go." She got up and pulled her shawl viciously over her shoulders, with a pretty petulantness, perhaps the most feminine thing she had done that evening. Possibly, the most genuine.

The senator smiled affably: "You do not deserve to be disappointed in either case; but it is later than you imagine; let me help you on the shorter distance in my carriage; it is at the door."

He accompanied her gravely to the carriage. As it rolled away she buried her little figure in its ample cushions and chuckled to herself, albeit a little hysterically. When she had reached her destination she found herself crying, and hastily, and somewhat angrily, dried her eyes as she drew up at the door of her lodgings.

"How have you prospered?" asked Mr. Harlowe, of counsel for Royal Thatcher, as he gallantly assisted her from the carriage. "I have been waiting here for two hours; your interview must have been prolonged—that was a good sign."

"Don't ask me now," said Carmen, a little savagely, "I'm worn out and tired."

"Mr. Harlowe bowed. "I trust you will be better to-morrow, for we expect our friend, Mr. Thatcher."

Carmen's brown cheek flushed slightly. "He should have been here before. Where is he? What was he doing?"

"He was snowed up on the plains. He is coming as fast as steam can carry him; but he may be too late."

Carmen did not reply.

The lawyer lingered. "How did you find the great New England senator?" he asked, with a slight professional levity.

Carmen was tired, Carmen was worried, Carmen was a little self-reproachful, and she kindled easily. Consequently she said, tetly: "I found him a gentleman!"

It is understood that the contract for the construction of the second section of the Cape Breton Railway, from Grand Narrows to North Sydney, a distance of eighty miles, has been awarded to Mr. James Isbester, contractor, of Ottawa. CITY DELIVERY.

Mr. Harry Heywood, having resigned the position of route agent for THE TIMES, Mr. Thomas Deney has taken charge of that department of our business. Mr. Deasy's special duties will be to superintend the carriers who deliver the paper to subscribers, to canvass the city and collect subscriptions. He is well and favorably known to every person in Victoria and will, we feel assured, meet with a large measure of success in his new occupation.

O. R. & N. Officials.

On the North Pacific there came over from the Sound to-day Mr. G. F. Russell, the new cashier for the Oregon Railway and Navigation Company, accompanied by Mr. H. W. Thielsen, his predecessor. They are registered at the Driard.

Ex-U. S. Consul Francis.

The injuries sustained by the Hon. Allen Francis, ex-U. S. Consul at this port, but now of St. Thomas, Ont., at the recent railway accident in that city were supposed at first to be of a serious character. He was run over by a run away horse with a hose reel attached. We are pleased to learn that he is recovering from the effects of the accident.

Grand Lodge A. F. & A. M.

At the annual communication of the Grand Lodge A. F. & A. M., of Canada, held in Brockville last week, the following officers were elected for the current Masonic year: G M, H Robertson, Collingwood, (re-elected); D G M, R T Walkem, Kingston, (re-elected); S W, A W Porte, London; J W, C J Rouse, M D, Parkdale; Chaplain, Rev C C Worrell, Morrisburg; Treasurer, E Mitchell, Hamilton; Registrar, D Derbyshire, Brockville; Secretary, J J Mason, Hamilton. The next meeting will be held in Toronto.

San Francisco Mails.

The Toronto Mail's Ottawa correspondent writes: "The Postmaster-General while visiting British Columbia will endeavor to make a new contract for carrying the mails between Victoria and San Francisco. When British Columbia entered Confederation the Dominion Government stipulated that it would maintain steam communication between the two points above mentioned, and to this end for some years past the Pacific Coast Steamship Company has received an annual subsidy of about $18,000. It is understood, however, that a number of gentlemen are desirous of starting a rival company, and if this is done Mr. McLellan will endeavor to come to terms with them."

A Rare Sight.

Says the Winnipeg Free Press of the 18th: It is not often that a town so far inland as Winnipeg sees a genuine Jack Tar in regulation uniform, but people at the station saw the sight yesterday evening. The train from the west brought in a midshipman and a sergeant of marines, both en route from H. M. S. Cormorant at Vancouver to report at Quebec. There was also an American skipper named Ford on board the train. He was commanding a New England ship which was wrecked a few weeks ago off the California coast, and he was going home to Portland. He was accompanied by four daughters whom he had taken to sea, "to bear him company" like the skipper of the celebrated Hesperus.

Gladstone Cigars.

Hastings Saw Mill.

We learn on good authority that the Hastings Saw Mill will resume work at once. The local syndicate, who owns the property, and Mr. Heatley, of San Francisco, the former owner and late lessee, will operate the mill together and with greater vigor than ever. The buildings will be thoroughly repaired and sidings will be constructed for the interior trade. According to the agreement between the railway company and the syndicate, the mill property has to be used for wood manufacturing purposes, otherwise a division of the real estate on the basis agreed upon—two-thirds to the syndicate and one-third to the railway company—will have to be made. The management, we understand, will not be changed.

Jubilee Mad.

Jubilee threatens to become the Press toady's and every other toady's only adjective. This man will sling his Jubilee net 'neath his Jubilee tree, smoke his Jubilee weed and drink his Jubilee tea. Such another may don his Jubilee pants and his Jubilee shoes, and bend his Jubilee steps to some Jubilee stews; and a Jubilee stench from a Jubilee drain may fill his Jubilee paunch with a Jubilee pain. It is Jubilee horses and Jubilee cows, and Jubilee asses and Jubilee sows; "Jubilee" everywhere, morning, noon and night, till the devil himself flies the world in a Jubilee fright. Where, strangers and aliens may wonder, is the honesty to be found among all this scum of falsehood and dissemination? Let us hope that Jubilee reaction may overtake us soon, else we'll all be Jubilee mad.—London Dispatch.

Black and Tan Cigars.

Miss Kate Field.

This talented lady will deliver a series of two lectures or otherwise speaking one lecture, "An Evening with Charles Dickens," on Friday, July 29th, and on Saturday evening, Kate Field's musical folly entitled, "Eyes and Ears in London," a novel, humorous and entertaining piece including original and characteristic songs, imitations of London society, etc., and a burlesque of Italian opera. The West London Express says: "Miss Kate Field's lecture at St. George's Hall on Dickens seemed to delight everybody present, on account of both its matter and the manner in which it was delivered. The 'Theatre' says that Mr. Herman Vezin, Dr. Westland Marston, Mr. Francillon, Mr. Justin McCarthy, and other competent judges, nearly stumbled over each other in their haste to congratulate Miss Field on her success. This lecture is to be repeated at Sadler's Wells to-morrow." Season tickets will be on sale at M. W. Waitt's until Thursday morning. These tickets will have the preference.

Provincial Appointments.

The appointments of D. Wilson, B. A., as school inspector, D. McRae as timber inspector, Reginald Jones (London), a notary public for the province, and Wm. Henry Lilley, of Donald, as notary public for Kootenay, have been gazetted.

A Heavy Fee.

The fee charged in the registry office for recording Mr. Dunsmuir's patent from the Dominion for the lands embraced in the area known as the Esquimalt and Nanaimo Railway belt, estimated at 1,500,000 acres, was $1,510, by all odds the largest fee ever charged on a land transfer in this province.

Have Removed.

The Messrs. Irving Bros. have removed their boot and shoe store from Government street to Yates street, in the store formerly occupied by J. Crossen, between Broad and Douglas streets. This firm makes a speciality of repairing and have secured a reputation for work in that line which cannot be excelled.

O'er the Hills and Far Awa'.

Fred Archer, who escaped New Westminster gaol, left in his bed in the cell a dummy manufactured from old clothing and straw. In his cell was found a letter addressed to "My Darling Nellie, at Vancouver." It is believed he has made good his escape across the border, and that for a time he has shaken British Columbia dust from off his feet.

Heavily Draped.

The Bishop's Palace, Yates street, is heavily draped in mourning for the late Archbishop Seghers. The St. Joseph's Literary Society rooms are likewise draped in token of remembrance for their Society's late president.

The Sisters of St. Ann's Convent have gone into retreat, and will so remain for a couple of weeks.

A Cheap Excursion.

Word reaches us to the effect that the C. P. R. at Winnipeg are organizing a cheap excursion to Banff, Westminster, Vancouver and Victoria. The fare for the round trip has been placed at $60, and several people in that city and country have signified their intention of taking advantage of the opportunity afforded to visit this coast and see the wonders of the mountains.

Must Pay.

In the Police Court this morning Kwong Lung was fined $100 for refusing to pay the Provincial tax. The fine to be levied for by distress; or in default to be imprisoned for one month. This should act as a warning to others refusing to pay this tax and it is to be hoped that it will have a salutary effect upon all delinquents—of whom there are known to be a great many in the city. So, gentlemen, pay up and save a fine of $100 or imprisonment.

English Window Glass, 16 oz., all sizes; also Stained and Enamelled Glass, at Muirhead and Mann's Sash and Door Factory.

Fruit for the East.

The St. Paul Pioneer Press says: "The California Fruit union is shipping fruit in car lots through Sacramento to New York in six days, and disposing of it at auction there at satisfactory prices. The freight rate is $510 a car. Peaches are sold at $2.50, plums at $2 and apricots at $2 to $2.50, all for half boxes. That isn't so bad. The auction sales give every dealer a chance, and the east will probably be thus fully supplied with fruit from California in the future some weeks before the eastern fruit season begins." This will give British Columbians an idea of the possibilities of the business to be done in the fruit line and of which they would not be slow to take advantage.

The Northern Pacific.

A San Francisco dispatch, for the purpose of sharing in the San Francisco trade and meeting the completion of the Canadian Pacific, have been in communication lately with the Pacific Coast Steamship Co. for the purpose of securing, if possible, a steamer line between this city and Tacoma, on terms similar to those granted to the Canadian Pacific. The negotiations, it is said, have been successful, the Pacific Coast Steamship Co. agreeing to set apart two first class steamers to run exclusively between this city and Tacoma. A contract containing the above and other stipulations as approved by the Northern Pacific has been signed by the directors of the company and forwarded to the Pacific Coast Steamship Co. for its endorsement. The agreement is to become effective in a week or two.

Launching of the Premier

The new steamer Premier, built for the Canadian Pacific Railroad Company, was successfully launched at the docks of the Union Iron Works on Wednesday afternoon. About 200 invited guests were present. The order to break away was given at eight minutes after 12, and then commenced a scene of activity which lasted until all obstructions had been removed. At about 12:20 the steamer slid gracefully down the greased ways into the water, amidst murmurs of applause from all sides. As the vessel was sliding down the ways the windows on the second deck were damaged slightly by coming in contact with one of the beams of the dock. The Premier is the property of the Canadian Pacific Navigation Company and measures 200 feet in length. Her beam on the water line measures thirty-three feet and on deck forty-two feet. She will have 1100 horse-power engines, and a speed of fifteen knots an hour. The number of passenger rooms is sixty-five. The steamer has three decks, and will ply on the Sound between British and American ports.

From the North.

The Olympian and Ancon arrived from Alaskan ports this morning, the former at 4:30 and the latter at 10:30 a. m. The Olympian passed the Ancon coming down and the Idaho going north yesterday. She brought down number of excursionists, many of whom were disappointed at the heavy disagreeable weather which prevailed during their stay in Alaska, it having rained every day they were there, preventing them from taking excursions into the country or beholding the gorgeous scenery of the glaciers and other mountains.

In mining news, nothing of importance was heard lately. The Treadwell mine on Douglas Island, was panning out well. Several new strikes had been reported in the vicinity of Juneau. A local butcher, it is reported, struck it rich in a placer diggings some two miles from that city. From the Yukon river country there had been no reports. Miners and prospectors from different parts of the continent were still rushing in, and big results were anticipated by many of these.

Mr. R. Maynard, who was a passenger on the Olympian, went north for the purpose of photographing the glaciers. The steamer did not reach her wharf till 9 o'clock at night. However, he managed to get a pretty good negative. Mr. Maynard confirms the report about encountering disagreeable weather. With the exception of a couple of days, he was sick from the day he left until he returned. He heard of the death of Archbishop Seghers for the first time on reaching this city to-day. St. Michaels is about one thousand miles further north than Sitka. From that place to San Francisco there is direct communication, but to the other Alaskan ports it is but occasional, and up to the date of the departure of the Olympian nothing of the tragic affair had been heard.

From Peace River.

George Kennedy, H. B. officer at Fort St. John, Peace River, reports to the Edmonton Bulletin as follows: A party of nine came into the upper Peace River last fall from Calgary by way of British Columbia. Three of these, named Jas. Christie, Lowe and Wright, wintered above the Rocky Mountain portage, about 20 miles above Hudson's Hope H. B. post. The other six, including Dan Williams, "nigger Dan," went up the Finlay branch of the Peace. They had some disagreements and Dan and another separated from the rest and came down to the mouth of the Finlay where they built a cabin in which to winter. Dan took sick in the fall and gradually wasted away until he died about the middle of February. His death was not heard of until the ice broke up and his companion came down to Christie's camp. He afterwards went back to Quesnelle, B. C., by the Parsnip River. The other four men who went up the Finlay prospecting had not been heard of when Mr. Kennedy left. Wright, one of Christie's companions, engaged with Mr. Davis, the trader, to take a boat load of goods down to Vermillion, leaving only Christie and Lowe out of the party of nine remaining for the summer. They have put in a garden as an experiment and will spend the summer hunting and mining. If the garden succeeds and other things are favorable Christie will probably start a stock ranche with a view to the development of the country when a railroad is built through the Peace River pass, as he has established himself almost at its entrance.
